Bond's Absence

Julian Bond, a representative of that day, the lecture was cancelled the Legislature of the State of Georgia and controversial figure in the recent Democratic National Convention, was scheduled to speak here on Nov. 14 at the Randolph Theater on Chestnut street.

CCP Competes With St. Joe's

CCP has been entered in an inter-collegiate competition with St. Joseph's College and Villanova University. The competition involves a marketing simulation in which the contestants make decisions for a theoretical manufacturing industry.

The Community College team, which is composed of Bill Coe, Mark Whitlock, and Frank J. Loynehas, has currently beaten other teams from the various fouryear institutions in this area.

The net profit of the CCP team was $568,725, substantially more than the other teams.

because Mr. Bond failed to arrive.

An explanation of Bond's failure to lecture in Philadelphia was sent to George C. Field, Director of Student Activities, by Micki Gardner, Sales Co-ordinator for the American Program Bureau which handles Julian Bond's lectures.

The letter reads as follows: "This letter is written with my sincerest apologies- and double apologies are in order. First because of my failure to contact you with regard to an explanation about Mr. Bond, and second because you had to write a letter informing me of my inconsiderate procedure."

On the day of Mr. Bond's scheduled appearance, I spoke with Mr. Lafferty of the school newspaper. The information which I had available to me then is no more complete today. Mr. Bond was ill and forced to stay in Atlanta."

The letter continued an apology and was signed by Miss Gardner.

Dean Field said that at this time, there will be no actions taken concerning the Bond lecture.

Bureau Explains WCCP To Initiate Four Hour Format

After several preliminary bat- swered in the negative. tles, the student radio station WCCP will have additional air time next semester with the extension of the present two-hour operating time to a four-hour period.

The last part of the WCCP campaign was devoted to polling the student body on their reaction to the recently initiated new program format of the station. Of the thousand questionaires that were handed out, eight hundred were re-

The first question was "are you familiar with WCCP's new for-

There were 366 yes answers to the question of whether the students liked the new program schedule while 150 answered no and 92 said that they "couldn't care less."

A list of preferences were then listed and they rated the following order: music, school activity announcements, news, sports, weather.

"What type of music do you desire?"

343 students said that they wanted a Top40 format. Oldies were the choice of 324 of the students participating in the poll. 318 stu-594 answered yes while 185 an- dents indicated that they wanted soul music to be included in the format.

The next question, which was the most crucial, was "do you feel WCCP can accomplish it's objectives in?'

A listing of hours were presented for the student's choice, 25 students stated that they thought that no hours would provide WCCP with the necessary time. One hour was found to be the choice of 15 students. 14 students said that they favored giving WCCP two hours for operation. Three hours operation received the favor of 67 of the students participating in the poll.

156 students were in favor of a four-hour operation period.

Finally 401 students indicated that they thought that the campus station should operate for more than four hours.

Bruce Shuster, business manager of WCCP, released these figures to THE COMMUNICATOR along with a statement from George C. Field, Director of Student Activities, which follows:

"The questionaire responses and the log of your activities would appear to demonstrate that WCCP is performing a service to the college over and beyond entertainment. You are to be commended for the imagination and dedication that went into this experimental programming. Accordingly you are authorized to operate a total of four hours daily, 10:15 a.m. to 2:15 p.m., Monday through Friday commencing the second semester.

"It is understood that the basic format tested over the past weeks will be continued and expanded as a whole to fill the time alloted. In other words, this is not intended to be merely or only two more hours of music, although more music will obviously be included: "Critics Chair" and "Interviews" have obviously "bombed," While these need not be expanded they ought not be summarily dropped: you are to continue to be a service. Other items have been more popular and may be expanded, Since you are more knowledgable than I concerning the various categories of today's music, I shall leave to your discretion the 'mix'."

AMS Resumes Next Semester

By Stephen Barthe

The Administrative Management Society has closed its door until early January. The last meeting was highlighted by the problems and successes of AMS's helping the hardcore unemployed in the Philadelphia area.

It was agreed at this meeting that during the fall semester the members set the foundation for further assistance which will be given to the unemployables next semester

Although the AMS ran into many problems and snags during the past semester, the president of the school organization, Stuart Silverman, said, "We refuse to abandon this vital program until we have exhausted all outlets and ef-

In reply to several questions put to her from the audience, Dr. Hertz discussed dating customs, modern Frenchwomen writers and the Frenchman's attitude towards Quebec. She advised the young man interested in dating to expect more group dating, dutch-treating after the first date, and no good-night kissing (?). As for women in modern French literature, she named a few, but considered there were fewer important Frenchwomen writers than their American counterparts. Surprisingly more French women are in the journalistic and other professions than American women.

Dr. F'Piere arranged the guest lecture. We hope Dr. Hertz and others like her can be induced to return for our further enlightenment.

Henry Varlack will conduct the concert chorale in two performances this weekend.

Budget Committee Closes Recognition

The following statement was issued to THE COMMUNICATOR today by Nancy Jean Prusienski, chairman of the budget committee of the Student Government Association:

"Be it known that as of today, the only clubs on campus that are recognized are the following:

"Data Processing Association, Film Club, Political Awareness Committee, Student Civil Rights Union, Young Collegians, Photography Club, Hillel and the Newman Club."

"These are the only clubs on campus that will receive: funds, room space for meeting, and bulletin board space."

"In January of 1969, the budget committee of the SGA will again review petitions for recognitions. The only clubs that will be permitted to petition for recognition this semester are the ones which are in the process of doing so now."

With Both Barrels

Opening The Conspiracy

By James C. Lafferty

This month marked the beginning of an on-campus underground newspaper here at Community College. As was noted in the COM-MUNICATOR Editorial Comment of the Nov. 13 issue which was entitled "In Defense", the publication exercised what it prefers to call "freedom," which I see as basically two types: 1) the freedom to use four-letter words, and 2) the freedom to abandon any legitimate practices of journalsim in order to preserve its "freedom."

The title "Open Conspiracy" is anything but an honest appraisal of the paper itself because the operation of the paper has not been open but in fact underground and almost clandestine.

Where is the office of the conspiracy and how did the editor, who made several notes throughout the first issue but refused to be acknowledged in that position on the masthead, notify interested writers?

How could this be a publication of "the students, faculty, and friends of the Community College of Philadelphia" when only a very select few around CCP knew of its existence?

The answer, quite frankly, is that no attempt was made to contact the "students and faculty" because this might cause a diversity of opinion such as an actual conservative bloc or group of interested individuals. Could you imagine a conservative underground newspaper?

No, the left-wing power structure or establishment couldn't afford the "Open"ness of such an operation. As long as you hold certain beliefs you're free.

Instead, several individuals gather together and publish something which is supposed to represent the collective endeavors of the "students, faculty and friends" of CCP. This phrase also assume that the students and faculty are not "friends" of CCP which in many cases is ture. But, let's define who the "friends" are since we have defined who they aren't.

Are they members of the Philadelphia chapter of Students for a Democratic Society which seems to be the paper's only advertiser?

Are they members of the "Resistance" which is rumored to a major financial backer of the paper?

Or are they just good oldfashioned friends of CCP, like the ones who came to Mayor Tate's recent speech here on campus? No one knows.

(NOTE: For anyone who would say that I am just lashing out at an opposition newspaper, I point out two things: 1)- A faculty member who seems to be rather influential at the staff of the conspiracy told one administrator that his publication did not intend to compete with the COMMUNICA-TOR. 2)- By the example set by the first issue, it is quite evident that the conspiracy does not intend to compete with the COM-MUNICATOR).

Student Power?

Editor:

The quest for "student power" is fraught with suspicion and uncertainty. What constitutes legitimate power? What are its limits? Who will adjudicate conflicts of interest? When does power become obstreperousness and freedom become license?

Recently a student spoke to me about "normal rights." When I asked about "abnormal wrongs" he thought I was being persnickety. The point I was making is simple: there are legal rights; there is no such thing as normal rights per se. Who determines what is legal? How may these be altered and expanded to correspond more effectively with the great r maturity and increased sense of responsibility among today's students.

There are dangers. Two unrelated situations may illustrate the wrong kind of student power.

(a) Ping-pong equipment which is expensive has been disappearing. Apparently some students have appropriated some of these items to their personal use. In an effort to cut down on the cost and facilitate a more equitable use of these items, my office requires students to check out this equipment. To do so the student responsible has to leave his ID card to be returned when he returns the equipment or makes financial restitution. Obviously we would rather have the equipment for reuse; the ID cards do us no good and the money merely complicates our bookkeeping.

One student failed to return the equipment in his charge by closing time. He left the gear in Room 511 only to find it missing the next day. Going to the Student Activities Office to retrieve his ID card he proceeded to most officiously berate the secretarial staff. When I spoke to him his demeanor was such that I felt compelled to present him to the Dean where it was disclosed that this student has a long history of such recalcitran-

Question: Is this "student

(b) Another instance involved two students who came to the Student Activities Office to procure free tickets. Instead of returning half hour later when designated staff persons were available to expedite the matter, these students signed a list reserved for those who have been given tickets: this is their receipt to this office.

Assuming this entitled them to by-pass the routine rigidly enforced by this office, they were chagrined to learn all tickets had been distributed when they returned the next day. Had they returned as directed they would have received tickets. They became so incensed that they, too, berated the secretarial staff and proceeded to involve the assistance of toehr administrators. When I investigated the matter, I learned that one of these students is in point of fact a non-resident who has continued to attend CCP as a resident of Philadelphia: it would appear clearly an effort to defraud.

power?"

If we are ever to work through this morass of misdirected rhetoric and stereotyped distrust, we shall have to commence a mutual examination of the matter. For a start I suggest to students and faculty as well as my fellow administrators a reading and study of Charles Frankel's article, "Student Power" in the Nov. 2 issue of the Saturday Review (p.23). This may provide a thoughtful basis for the necessary dia-

I saw "Barbarella". I read Thomas D. Miller's criticism of March Werlinsky's review and I read Marc Werlinsky's answer to that criticism.

In Rebuttal

The Issue Of Dress

By Ellen G. Hankin Assistant Professor

If it didn't matter, the requirement of appropriate dress would not be an issue. There are actually three considerations of the issue: (1) to whom does it matter, (2) why does it matter, (3) who benefits.

TO WHOM DOES IT MATTER BF) Whether or not a young woman or a young man aspiring toward a secretarial career is appropriately dressed matters a great deal to a prospective employer. Employers can be and are generally very discriminating about the appearance of those who hope to become secretaries. Often the secretary is the liaison between the company and the outside world. She or he may be the first one to be seen or to have any communication with clients or customers, and it could be on this first impression that opinions, favorable or unfavorable, would be formed of the company. It is hardly any wonder, then, that employers expect their secretaries to make the best possible appearance in order to convey the proper company image. "That look" that is desired is one that is smart, somewhat conservative yet fashionable, and immaculately groomed. This cannot be achieved without careful planning and practice; in fact, quite the contrary effect will result without the careful planning and practice.

WHY DOES IT MATTER (BF)

Just as it takes correct practice to develop shorthand skill, it also takes correct practice in regard to proper dress and grooming habits and/or the development of personal and social skills so that they become a natural part of the individual and can be accomplished without stress or strain. The requirement of appropriate dress in the secretarial curriculum is just as much a part of the total training as is the requirement of shorthand or internship experience. One cannot be expected to achieve the desired outcomes of the total program until all the requirements have been fulfilled.

WHO BENEFITS (BF)

The advantages of this program to the student are manifested in many ways: 1. It is considerably more economical to dress well and attractively when proper planning and judgment are exercised. It takes less money than it does for the person who falls prey to every fashion whim and who buys the "last word" in high fashion clothes, jewelry, and gimmicks. One needs only to check the stores to see that the "mod of the day" items are the most expensive and are also the most shortlived. They become outdated in the shortest possible time and are replaced by other "far-out" or "up-to-theminute" styles which will also go out as fast as they came in. Conversely, the money invested in a good suit or dress that is smart, somewhat traditional in styling, will bring far greater returns in wearability and praises from the real fashion authorities. 2. Selfconfidence is developed when one can be sure that he or she looks right for the occasion, whether this be social or business. The welldressed person who displays quiet,

Girard's Will And The Community College

By Warren T. Hope

The idea of a City or Community College is an old one in Philadelphia. Those of us who are or have been connected with the Community College should have a special interest in seeing this idea grow, prosper and flourish. Good, lowcost education for the many was also a special interest of Stephen Girard of Philadelphia and his will reflects that interest.

Girard's will, like so many documents which affect the life of the community, has been greatly discussed and debated but rarely read. Article XXI of Girard's will is of particular interest to those of us who are concerned with the idea of an ever-improving Community College: "And so far as regards the residue of my personal estate, in trust as to two millions of dollars, part thereof, to apply and expend so much of that sum as may be necessary -- in erecting, as soon as practicably may be, in the centre of my square of ground between High (New Market-W.H.) and Chestnut streets, and Eleventh and Twelfth streets in the City of Philadelphia (which square of ground I hereby devote for the purpose hereinafter stated and none other forever) a permanent college. ... 'Now this is a section of the original will dated Feb. 16, 1830. On June 20, 1831, Mr. Girard made a correction to his will, where he states the college should be built on the land called Peel Hall on Ridge road in Penn Township, where the Girard College presently stands.

In this correction Stephen Girard also described what was to be done with his center city square-- "I declare it to be part of the residue and remainder of my real and personal estate and given and devised for the same uses and purposes as are declared in Section XX of my will, it being my intention that the said square of ground shall be built upon and improved in such a manner as to secure a safe and permanent income for the purposes stated in said XXth section." We of the Community College can look around us and see that Mr. Girard's square has indeed been "built upon and improved." The only question which remains is what was this "safe and permanent income! to be used for The answer is in the XXth Section where "the Mayor Aldermen and Citizens of Philadelphia" are told of two things which Girard felt should be taken care of -- (1) "I have been for a long time impressed with the importance of educating the poor, and of placing them by the early cultivation of their minds, and the development of their moral principles, above the many temptations, (to) which, through poverty and ignorance they are exposed..." and (2) "I have sincerely at heart the welfare of the city of Philadelphia, and, as a part of it. am desirous to improve the neighborhood of the river Delaware, so that the health of the citizens may be promoted and preserved, and that the eastern part of the city may be made to correspond better with the interior ... "

It is not my intention here to answer questions but, rather, to raise some. Has the wealth of the Girard Estate been utilized to maintain the river Delaware and our waterfront or has it been invested in industries which have helped to pollute that river, leaving "the eastern part of the city" to decay into the gaping eye-sore we have today? Hasn't the public been led to believe that Girard's will was broken to admit Negro children to Girard College when in fact Girard only wanted preference to be given to "poor white male orphan" applicants, but never stated any segment of Brotherly Love's population should be granted an exclusive monopoly to that institution? Isn't the fact that the Community College pays rent to the Girard Estate in violation of the spirit of Stephen Girard's will? And, finally, is it not high time the citizens of Philadelphia do as Girard directed, that is, take an active interest in the administration of the Girard Estate to see that it is used for the benefit of the community at large?

'America Hurrah' Stabs Sharply At Empty Lives In U.S.A.

By Howard M. Miller

In "America Hurrah," Jeantriple play with his three one-act satires on some of the games people play in the good old U.S. of A.

The first of the three bombshells, 'Interview," concerns a major plight of the cities -- the cold lack of communication, any communication, between people. The characters all talk at, rather than to, each other.

Four job applicants nervously meet with a quartet of interviewers, whose faces are immobile plastic masks. The questions and responses of all eight bounce around the stage like ping pong balls, with no one understanding or attempting to understand anyone

A woman is lost and can't get anyone to help her find her way; a man seeks help from a priest, who remains totally unresponsive to his plea; a patient seeking psychiatric treatment is answered by the doctor, 'blah, blah, blah, complex, blah, blah, blah, mother, blah, blah, blah, hostile." And so it goes, with people blindly marching around like mechanical dolls-mseeing, unresponsive, and un-

The second bite, "TV," takes place in the office of a television rating service. Two men and a girl are supposed to be watching the boob tube, from which flows a constant babble of soap operas, news, and commercials. As the day progresses, the reaction of the three to each other become undistinguishable from the television pap.

The final chomp is the shortest and most direct on its target. "Motel" has two gargoyle-like human machines check into a motel. While the owner talks lovingly about the sweet motel she keeps, with its homemade hooked rugs and charming self-flushing toilets, the couple proceeds to rip the room to shreds--the bedcovers, the bathroom fixtures, the Gideon Bible, the walls--everything. Then they get their jollies by scribbling obscenities all over

'Yellow Submarine'

By HOWARD M. MILLER

"Yellow Submarine", the Beatles first go at an animated cartoon is just like almost everything the Beatles do, a solid groove all the way. Enchanting, whimsical, visually lovely, and audibly Beatley, this movie at the Eric Rittenhouse Square and Wynnwood is a delight to behold.

The story tells of an attack on Pepperland by the horrible Blue Meanies, who are, coincidently, both blue and mean. The Blue leanies say 'mo" to everything. and, worst of all, they abhor music. These meanies attack Pepperland and plunk the inhabitants over the head with large green apples (direct from Apple Corps, no doubt) and turn them from colorful happy people to gray cardboard statues.

One man manages to escape and tries to warn the others. He passes four musicians playing chamber music and tells them that the Blue Meanies attacking. What's to be done? "Finish the quartet," the leader calmly acknowledges.

So the lone survivor manages to reach the yellow sumarine, and he sails off to Liverpool seeking help. By a stroke of luck he comes across Paul, George, John, and Ringo, and brings them back to save Pepperland, which, of course, they ultimately do, pausing along the way to sing several songs from "Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band."

the walls. Finally they tear apart Claude Van Itallie scores a solid the body of the motel keeper, and after their orgy of destruction, they stomp off, leaving the audience facing a mirrored wall and floodlights shining into its eyes.

It is now the audience which is on stage. It's us that Van Itallie is talking about--our violence, our impersonal lives, our tastelessness.

"America Hurrah" certainly makes its point. Even though we were getting quite used to obscenities being flung at us from the stage lately, "America Hurrah" shows us that obscenity is more than skin deep. It is not the language that is obscene, it is the increasing number of feelings in our society that is filthy.

Hoseannas to the cast which manages to bring to its height all of Jean Claude Van Ittallie's grotesque images of ourselves, and to TLA for bringing us "America Hurrah."

Pepperland itself is surely the place where Alice would have gone to if she hadn't visited Wonderland instead. It's full of simply marvelous creatures—a fish with human hands, a giant glove which pounds its fist on an enemy, the fabulous Sea of Holes ("How many holes would you say there were here?" "Just about enough to fil the Albert Hall.")

The artwork, with flowers absolutely everywhere, looks like it was created by the teamwork of Dali and Dr. Seuss--strange, endearing, and beautiful.

After taking this delightful journey to Pepperland, it seems almost a shame to go back to Liverpool (or Philadelphia), but as we leave the theater singing "All Together Now," we're content to keep the memory of Pepperland tucked in a warm corner of our heart, along with Alice, Mary Poppins, and Winnie-the-Pooh.

The Issue of Dress

(Continued from Page 2) good taste commands respect from peers and superiors while the person who must attract attention because of conspicous, ostentatious attire is often thought to be covering up for a serious lack of self-confidence. 3. The best jobs are available to the best qualified applicants. Certainly, personal appearance rates high on the list of desirable qualifications for a secretary. Kahlil Gibran expressed a thought so aptly in The Prophet, speaking of clothing: "And though you seek in garments the freedom of privacy you may find in them a harness and chain." Obviously, the habits that are formed while in school are the ones that are likely to be displayed when one becomes part of the world of work. It is for this reason that the students at CCP will be prepared to meet the competition.
